The Enemy: No Time For Tears

BY THEIR own admission, The Enemy have drawn on the past for inspiration for the new with this fantastic rock 'n' roll track.

No Time For Tears is as old school as they come, with a tremendous earthy, gritty sound supporting soaring anthemic vocals. It's jeans and gasoline material, and something of quite a surprise from an ostensibly indie outfit.

That said, it's a very welcome twist, and if The Enemy manage to produce an album full of tracks like this, the forthcoming LP Music For The People could be one of the biggest rock soundtracks to the year. The Coventry three-piece have clearly tuned into the world situation and decided we all need to get back to basics to inject new hope in our lives, and No Time For Tears is something of a mantra to overcome.
Rock on!
